Focus and Scope

The Oñati Socio-Legal Series (ISSN: 2079-5971) (hereinafter: “the journal” or “OSLS”) is an international peer-reviewed on-line journal which publishes work within the field of law and society. This is broadly defined to include work which makes a significant contribution to the understanding and analysis of law as a set of social institutions, processes, practices or techniques, using any methodologies and approaches from the social sciences and humanities.

The IISL and its journal OSLS take pride in their cosmopolitan and all-inclusive vocation, especially regarding production and dissemination of high-profile academic knowledge. English being today's main vehicle of expression of scientific knowledge, it is also our journal's main language. However, although a title, abstract, and key words in English are mandatory for all papers, OSLS accepts and encourages use of other languages as well - by reason of the IISL's origin and location, Spanish, French and Basque are the other three main ones.

Articles should normally be of 8-15,000 words. However, shorter and longer work can be considered if the length is appropriate and justified.

OSLS welcomes proposals for special (thematic) issues. To learn more about our requirements and recommendations, please click here.

Publication Frequency

The OSLS will publish one volume per year, with issues published bimonthly. Further special issues can be published.

Issues will be published on the first day of February, April, June, August, October, and December.

Ownership disclosure

Oñati Socio-Legal Series is owned and published by the Oñati IISL Foundation, a non-profit organization which was established jointly in 1988 by the International Sociological Association's Research Committee on the Sociology of Law (RCSL) and the Government of the Basque Country, which nowadays provides most of the funding.

To learn more, please read our Statutes: <http://www.iisj.net/en/about-iisl/statutes-foundation-international-institute-sociology-law-o%C3%B1ati>

Open Access Policy

This journal provides immediate open access to its content on the principle that making research freely available to the public supports a greater cross-disciplinary global exchange of knowledge. Its sharing license is CC-BY-NC-ND 4.0 (Attribution, Non-commercial, No derivatives). Read more in our Copyright Notice.

Publication Charges

The IISL is a non-profit organisation, and Oñati Socio-Legal Series does not take any publication charge from the authors.

Ethics and Responsibility

The International Institute for the Sociology of Law is committed to upholding the integrity of the work we publish. The value of academic publishing relies on everyone involved behaving ethically. The following points are intended to give a broad overview on our policy. Ethical issues to consider

Authors:

- Originality and plagiarism: Authors must ensure that their work is original and entirely written by them. Where the works or words of others or of their own published writing have been used, the sources must be clearly cited or quoted, following the style guidelines recommended by OSLS, or appropriately acknowledged, and appropriate permission must be obtained where necessary.

OSLS requires that all authors, by checking the appropriate item in the Submission Process, confirm that their submitted work has not been published before and is not under consideration at any other journal. This excludes non-commercial publication, e.g. as pre-print, proceeding, presentation, work notes, and similar formats. OSLS will not accept translated versions of articles published in journals, books, or any other commercial form of publication.

If elements of a work have been previously published, including publication in Oñati Socio-Legal Series, the authors are required to acknowledge the earlier work, giving details of each publication, and to indicate how the work submitted to OSLS differs and builds upon the research and conclusions contained in the previous work. Therefore, the authors' submission should not cite their own work literally, and in addition to this, it should also be significantly different from these previously published works.

- Research Ethics: Authors should ensure that research presented in their manuscripts has been conducted in accordance with ethical guidelines widely accepted in socio-legal scholarship, provided by either their home institutions or scientific organizations of reference. OSLS and the IISL endorse SLSA's Principles of Ethical Research Practice and recommend following these principles. In case of conflict or in order to establish the ethical nature of the research reflected in any particular work, OSLS may request the author(s) to ensure and express that they have followed these or other relevant ethic codes to conduct their research, and include a general disclaimer on behalf of the IISL.

- Rights: Their work must not infringe on any rights of others, including privacy rights and intellectual property rights.

- Data presentation, access, and retention: The data must be true and research results must be presented clearly, honestly, and without fabrication, falsification or inappropriate data manipulation. Such data must be the authors' own or they must where necessary have permission to use data reproduced in their paper. Authors may be asked to provide the raw data in connection with a paper for editorial review, and should be prepared to provide public access to such data.

- Presentation of research: Research methods should be described clearly and unambiguously so that findings can be confirmed by others.

OÑATI INTERNATIONAL INSTITUTE
FOR THE SOCIOLOGY OF LAW

INSTITUTO INTERNACIONAL
DE SOCIOLOGÍA JURÍDICA DE OÑATI

- Disclosure and conflicts of interest: Any real or apparent conflicting or competing interest must be clearly stated in the paper, including sources of funding or other support for the research.
- Significant errors in published works: If an author subsequently discovers a significant error or inaccuracy in his/her own published work, it is the author's obligation to contact the Journal to identify and correct the error or inaccuracy, and cooperate with the Journal to retract or correct the paper.
- Authorship of the paper must be accurately represented, so that all individuals that participated in the actual authorship of the work, and only those persons, are properly credited as authors, and that all who participated have given consent for publication and representation as authors.

Submissions from authors who have been published by the journal within the previous natural year will not be considered, unless the returning author is a co-author of a paper for which they are not the first author.

Reviewers must:

- Maintain the confidentiality of the review process.
- Immediately alert the Journal of any real or potential competing interest that could affect the impartiality of their reviewing and decline to review where appropriate.
- Conduct themselves fairly and impartially.
- Write their reviews in a courteous manner, avoiding the use of inappropriate or potentially offensive language, both in the review and in the confidential comments to the editor(s) that they may make.
- Oñati Socio-Legal Series encourages use of gender-neutral language, which has been proposed to reduce both discrimination and gender stereotyping. When in doubt, reviewers are invited to refer to the editor.

Issue Editors must:

- Maintain and promote consistent ethical policies for their journal issue.
- Oversee and act to enforce those policies as needed in a fair and consistent manner.
- Exercise the highest standards of personal integrity in their work as editor of the journal, recognising and planning for instances where they could have a competing interest or the appearance of a competing interest.

Author Guidelines

Oñati Socio-Legal Series (hereinafter, “OSLS”) publishes articles which make a significant contribution to the understanding and analysis of law as a set of social institutions, processes, practices or techniques, using any methodologies and approaches from the social sciences and humanities.

OSLS publishes, among others, monographic issues of articles resulting from or related to workshops, meetings or other activities that have been held at the International Institute for the Sociology of Law (Oñati), as well as articles by visitors, resulting from students’ dissertations, and other papers submitted by scholars from all around the world.

Publication can be in any language, though the main languages are English, Spanish and French. Articles should normally be of 8,000-15,000 words. However, shorter and longer work can be considered if the length is appropriate and justified.

Articles should use the Author-Date system of citation, using the style of the International Review of Sociology. Articles should include a full Reference list. Where an item is available electronically (not in a closed database) please supply the URL link. We do not prescribe particular spelling conventions, but ask you to choose one you consider appropriate and follow it consistently.

Articles must include an up-to 150-word abstract and 4-5 keywords. The abstract should summarize the paper's contents, the aims of the research, the methodology used, and the main findings, and highlight the distinctive contribution to its field.

If the article is not written in English, please provide a translation into English of the title, abstract and keywords.

Please provide a short biographical note, including your current affiliation, postal and email contact data, and a link to your ORCID identification page. If you have not registered for an ORCID identification number, we heartily recommend that you do so. ORCID provides a persistent digital identifier that distinguishes you from every other researcher and, through integration in key research workflows such as manuscript and grant submission, supports automated linkages between you and your professional activities ensuring that your work is recognized. ORCID is a non-profit organization (Learn more on Orcid.org).

Please make sure your paper as submitted ensures a blind peer review, and remove your name from the paper and the properties for the file. Include your affiliation and contact information (both professional postal address and email) in the submission form. Likewise, all field codes must be removed prior to submission, including cross-reference codes (Zotero, EndNote, etc.)

INSTITUTO INTERNACIONAL
DE SOCIOLOGÍA JURÍDICA DE OÑATI

Headings and subheadings must be marked with numbers, separated by full stops (i.e. 1.; 1.2.; 1.2.1.), with no more than three numbers.

Please note that you are responsible for proofreading your article, before submission as well as after acceptance and final submission. Reviewers may suggest stylistic changes or point out mistakes, but we do not proofread articles for form or for content. Please therefore check it carefully for spelling, grammar (see OSLS's Grammar and Spelling guidelines), and clarity of expression, as well as for correction and consistence of cites and references. If we consider that there is an unacceptable level of mistakes, we will return the article to you.

If approved for publication, your paper will be formatted electronically as a Portable Document Format (PDF) file, using the standard layout for papers in the Series. If you prefer to retain your own format for a specific reason, please contact us. Papers should be submitted as OpenOffice or Microsoft Word (.doc or .rtf) files. Please use Verdana 10-point font, 1.5 line spaced, with italic rather than underlining (except for URLs).

Once the paper has been laid out, it will be returned to you for a last revision, before it is definitively published. As far as possible, articles will be made available as First Online before they are published in the journal. Prior to being published in the journal, each article will be assigned a DOI number.

Content Guidelines

OSLS enforces a number of minimum requirements to ensure a pre-review standard. For all submissions, authors must make sure that their text is written in correct academic English, and have it checked by a native English speaker with a good command of academic language use. A paper may be rejected purely on the basis of poor language.

For special issues, the following guidelines apply:

- Topicality, both for empirical context and for theoretical implications of the issue.
- The funding institutions of the research that constitutes the content basis of the book must be named, and the methodology having informed the research must be stated.
- Articles must:
 - Attend to a common set of questions, ideally from different angles.
 - Cross-reference: be a tightly-knit work, and a well-argued presentation of a certain topic.
- Senior authors as well as younger scholars will ideally be represented in authorship.

Submission Preparation Checklist

Authors are required to check off their submission's compliance with all of the following items:

1. The submission has not been previously published¹, nor is it before another journal for consideration (or an explanation has been provided in Comments to the Editor). An exception to this would be that of articles that are a translation of an article previously published in Oñati Socio-Legal Series. If elements of this submission have been previously published, a supplementary document is included giving details of each publication, and indicating how this submission differs and builds upon the research and conclusions contained in the previous work.
2. A biographical note of the author is provided, including affiliation, postal and email contact details, and an ORCID number.
3. The text adheres to the stylistic and bibliographic requirements outlined in the Author Guidelines, which is found in About the Journal.
4. The abstract is a comprehensive summary of the aims of the research, the methodology or methodologies used and the main findings or contributions to the field.
5. If submitting to a peer-reviewed section of the journal, the instructions in Ensuring a Blind Review have been followed, including removal of all field codes.
6. Once approved, the paper will be included in ESCI, Scopus, Dialnet, DOAJ, e-Revistas \(CSIC\) and CrossRef.

Peer Review Process

General editors first check that the article meets the quality criteria specified in the Author Guidelines. If they do, the papers are double-blind peer-reviewed by two referees.

For collective special issue submissions, the potential Guest Editors will be invited to propose selected papers or authors to submit papers to OSLs. Editors-in-chief will assess the issue proposal and will decide whether it fits the criteria for publication in OSLs.

Editors-in-chief may decide to include individual articles, related to the main topic of the issue or not, to be published in the same issue; if this is the case, the guest editors will be informed beforehand and offered to mention these articles in the introduction to the issue. In either case, the individual articles will be visually separated from the thematic articles by a different section title.

Editors of the journal can also gather in a single issue a number of articles that, despite being in themselves individual submissions, may fall within a general thematic area, thus strengthening the overall attractiveness of the resulting issue.

¹ Excluding preprints published through non-commercial venues or platforms, such as personal websites, blogs, repositories, etc.

INSTITUTO INTERNACIONAL
DE SOCIOLOGÍA JURÍDICA DE OÑATI

In regard to the review process, one referee will be nominated by the Guest Editors, and one or more by the OSLS editors-in-chief. For other papers, reviewers are nominated by the OSLS editors-in-chief, advised by the Editorial Board.

Authors are requested to anonymize their paper and to remove their name and references from the document metadata. Reviews are anonymized too. All communication between authors and reviewers is done through the IISL, to ensure anonymity of both authors and reviewers.

Due to its well-established and respected status, OSLS has succeeded at garnering interest in academics from all over the world who are willing and keen to review for us, therefore establishing a large roster of reviewers who, all together, cover all areas of Sociology of Law and contribute to keep up the quality of our journal. OSLS can now attest to an international, diverse and inclusive pool of reviewers from several countries in all continents and continues to appoint or accept new qualified reviewers. Since 2011 until mid-2019, OSLS had received reviews from 1,200 scholars.

Reviewers are asked to comment on the following aspects:

1. Is the paper well organised and structured, does the argument flow well?
2. Are sources adequately and properly cited, and are the language and expression clear, adequate and appropriate?
3. Is the paper of sufficient interest and originality to be published in the Series?
4. Do you have suggestions for revision of the paper:
 - (i) parts which could be shortened or deleted,
 - (ii) arguments or points that need clarification, expansion or development,
 - (iii) important and relevant views or work which the author should take into account, or
 - (iv) for reorganisation of the paper?
5. Please state whether your suggestions are
 - (i) advice to the author and the paper could be published without checking the revised version
 - (ii) you have suggested specific changes which must be made but a non-specialist could check before publication that the changes have been made;
 - (iii) the paper should not be published unless the revised version is approved by you (or if you are not able or willing to read a revised version, please if possible suggest someone who could); or
 - (iv) the paper should not be published.

In the system, they must choose one of these options:

Accept submission ; Revisions required ; Resubmit for review; Resubmit elsewhere ;
Decline submission ; See comments

In case of serious disagreement between reviewers, the editor may make a final decision or nominate a third reviewer.

OÑATI INTERNATIONAL INSTITUTE

INSTITUTO INTERNACIONAL
DE SOCIOLOGÍA JURÍDICA DE OÑATI

Based on the reviewers' recommendations, authors will be notified of the review process (Accept submission ; accept with minor revisions ; resubmit for review ; decline submission), including the reviewers' reports and comments.

Authors must revise their papers accordingly in four weeks' time. A letter explaining the changes made can also be included. Authors are required to respond to critical or disfavoured reviews, by addressing the main points raised by the reviewer.

The reviewers' recommendations will always be taken in consideration; however, editors will make the final decision on the publication of the paper, and the author will be informed. All the communication will be to the email account used to submit the paper to the journal.

First Online publication

As an additional value service, whenever possible, the Institute will upload the Accepted Manuscript with its DOI – these are the OSLS First Online manuscripts. This is an increasingly common practice by academic journals, and it is done as a way to facilitate rapid access to global academic audiences and therefore usability of accepted, copy-edited academic material for citing and referencing.

The journal may, or may not publish an article in this mode, and, although the journal will aim to do this shortly after copy-edition, the timeframe can vary.

As a matter of principle, the number of articles available as OSLS First Online shall not exceed the number of accepted articles to be included in the three forthcoming issues. The OSLS First Online versions will be removed from the First Online modality upon publication of their VOR.

If OSLS First Online manuscripts are selected to be posted online, they will be so after technical editing, formatting for publication and author proofing. After this publication, further technical editions may be made to correct typos or to improve readability or presentation of the article, but the content will not be edited or modified in any way.

These First Online manuscripts are available to everyone and citable by the Digital Object Identifier (DOI). The DOI for the manuscript is persistent for all iterations; in other words, the OSLS First Online manuscript has the same DOI as the final Version of Record that will be published on the OSLS official publishing website. Therefore, it is recommended that authors use this DOI to divulge or cite their First Online published paper.

The same sharing policy guidelines apply as for Accepted Manuscripts. Especially, authors must not share the First Online articles in any other journal, or consider them as apt to be republished – only the Version of Record can be republished, and only in compliance with the journal's CC BY-NC-ND 4.0 license.

Corrections to the Version of Record (“Corrigenda”), Retractions and Withdrawals

We distinguish between major and minor errors.

- All major errors are accompanied by a separate correction notice. The correction notice will provide clear details of the error and the changes that have been made to the Version of Record (VoR), as well as a DOI link to the corrected VoR. OSLS will take the following steps:
 - Correct the online article;
 - Add a correction notice to the article, clearly detailing the error and the correction made, as well as the location of it in the article;
 - Publish the correction notice as any other journal item.
- All minor errors will include a footnote on the article detailing to the reader that the article has been corrected. Minor errors do not impact the reader’s understanding of the academic material.
- All substantive content-related modifications to the version of record must be described in a footnote identifying the changes made to the published article.
- An article with minor corrections will not be accompanied with a correction notice published separately.

In both cases, the corrected article will replace the previous version of the article.

An erratum (pl. errata) is a formal error in an article as a result of the production process from an original submission to a Version of Record. These do not usually impact the value or reader’s understanding of the academic substance, therefore, they will be amended like minor errors.

A retraction is the withdrawal of an article and its removal from the online website of the journal, as well as the statement informing of this removal and the warning that the article should be considered invalid as a source of knowledge. OSLS will retract articles for reasons related to scientific misconduct including plagiarism, serious errors, and duplicate/concurrent publishing (self-plagiarism).

Authors may withdraw a paper published as First Online by submitting a reasoned request to the journal. Withdrawal requests at this stage will be studied case by case with attention paid to the specificities of the situation and the particular reasons given by the author, and will be granted only exceptionally. Withdrawn papers have not been found to contain fatal errors that invalidate them (retractions).

Copyright Notice

OSLS strictly respects intellectual property rights but it is our policy that the author retains copyright, and articles are made available under a Creative Commons Non-

Commercial Attribution No-Derivatives 4.0 license; further details available at <https://creativecommons.org/licenses/by-nc-nd/4.0> If this is not acceptable to you, please contact us.

Use of this license means that you are free to republish the article in this version, in non-commercial platforms or venues or in ways that do not have a commercial purpose, and provided you attribute the work citing the author(s) and the journal, and provide a link to the First Online or Version of Record as published by OSLS, including its DOI number.

The license also allows others to use and copy the article, but only with acknowledgement, for non-commercial purposes, and with no derivatives, that is, you may not alter, transform, or build upon the work, as stated on the website indicated above. Examples of commercial purposes are republication in a subscription-only journal, or in a book marketed in a conventionally commercial way by a publisher. For example, an article may not be included as part of a collection in a commercially distributed book of essays, even if it is only a small portion of the book. Examples of non-commercial publications are textbooks, or reports or informative publications issued by governments, charities/nonprofits, or individuals, depending on the circumstances of publications; examples of derivatives are extended versions of articles, or translations. When in doubt, please refer to the IISL.

Additionally, for any reuse or distribution, you must make clear to others the license terms of this work.

In the case of OSLS, ND does not prevent remixes of the work that are aimed at divulging knowledge, citing the work under the ND license, making academic criticism, or any similar scholarly activity with the purpose of achieving wider dissemination of the ideas expressed in the licensed works. It does prevent republication, full or partial, of the licensed works after substantial modification.

Translations are not considered a republication. Therefore, OSLS permits publication of translations of articles published originally in OSLS, with the following guidelines:

1. The authors must inform the editor of OSLS and request formal approval to submit or publish the translated version in another journal, with name and other details about this journal.
2. The authors must ensure that the translated version reflects the data, interpretation, and main findings or conclusions of the original version.
3. The translated version, when published, must acknowledge that a previous version was published in OSLS, and provide a DOI number, or DOI link to it.

As soon as an accepted article is edited by OSLS and approved by author(s) and editor(s), it will be stored in our repository; and, as soon as possible, it will be assigned a DOI and published as First Online; please read more about this in our Sharing Policy. Once it is assigned to an issue, it will be published on <http://opo.iisj.net/index.php/osls/index> in its final form. The article will keep the same DOI in all its iterations.

The non-exclusive permission you grant to us includes the rights to disseminate the bibliographic details of the article, including the abstract supplied by you, and to authorise others, including bibliographic databases, indexing and contents alerting services, to copy and communicate these details.

For information on how to share and store your own article at each stage of production from submission to final publication, please read our Self-Archiving and Sharing policy.

The Copyright Notice showing the author and co-authors, and the Creative Commons license will be displayed on the article, and you must agree to this as part of the submission process. Please ensure that all co-authors are properly attributed and that they understand and accept these terms.

Sharing Policy

We distinguish between three types of document depending on its production stage: preprint, accepted manuscript, and Version of Record (published journal article)

- A preprint is the original work of an author, before or right after submission;
- An accepted manuscript is the piece of work after incorporating the revisions suggested by the reviewers, and other amendments, additions or changes made by the author;

and

- the Version of Record / Published journal article is the final, enriched version of the article, laid out with OSLS's heading and visual traits, and after having undergone the editorial production process which adds value to it (typesetting, formatting, typography correction, reference formatting, DOI assignation, pagination, publishing, dissemination, and archiving). This is the article that is published as part of its volume and issue, on OSLS's publishing website (<http://opo.iisj.net/index.php/osls/index>).

OSLS works on the basic principle that authors always keep copyright on their work, and OSLS always has the right of first publication of articles that are accepted.

In order to reconcile both interests, we have set some simple guidelines on how authors can share their work.

Preprint

Authors can share their preprint anywhere at any time.

Accepted Manuscript

Authors can share their accepted manuscript immediately:

- via their non-commercial personal homepage or blog (including Academia.edu, Researchgate.net, SSRN.com and similar platforms);
- via their research institute or institutional repository for internal institutional uses or as part of an invitation-only research collaboration work-group, ie a closed, non-public repository;
- directly by providing copies to their students or to research collaborators for their personal use.

We request that authors indicate that it is an accepted article by OSLS whose publication is forthcoming, and to include a link to the OSLS website. We recommend the following formula:

This is a pre-copyedited, author-produced version of an article accepted for publication in Oñati Socio-Legal Series (<http://opo.iisj.net/index.php/osls/index>) following peer review.

These rules apply to the First Online published articles, too.

Version of Record

As OSLS is a Diamond Open Access journal with a CC BY-NC-ND 4.0 Creative Commons license, authors can share their published journal article (also called Version of Record) anywhere immediately after official publication on the OSLS website, as long as the republication is compliant with the CC BY-NC-ND license. In essence, this license precludes republication of the article for commercial purposes, i.e. in subscription journals, or conventionally marketed books. Please refer to the IISL if in doubt.

The IISL, as publisher of OSLS, only requests that it is clearly acknowledged that first publication was in OSLS, and that a link with its DOI is included.

OSLS sets no embargo period after a work is published on its official website.
